YULIA KURKA

One Ukranian immigrant has found her calling as an activist for her home country.

PUTIN — 'OUT OF HIS MIND'

Yulia Kurka, 25, who emigrated from Ukraine two years ago, is a permanent resident of the U.S. who works as a Web developer and lives in Manayunk with her husband. In November, when Ukrainian president Viktor Yanukovych announced he would suspend plans for the country to join the European Union, Kurka began networking with friends and fellow Ukrainians to hold protests in Philadelphia.

More than 100 protesters died during the Maidan Revolution, protesting at Maidan Square in Kiev. But today, Yanukovych has fled office and an interim president is overseeing the government. Meanwhile, Russia is seeking to annex Crimea, a region in eastern Ukraine, into the Russian Federation, despite the protests of President Obama and other Western countries.

Kurka, who had no prior experience as an activist, is now part of a new Ukrainian advocate's group, known as Razom, with members in New York, Washington, D.C., and Philadelphia. She shared her thoughts on the revolution in her homeland and what she thinks will happen next as Ukrainian presidential elections, set for May 25, draw near.

What do you think about the course President Vladimir Putin is pursuing?
I think that people that stay in power too long lose their mind. I don't think that most Russians support Putin interfering with Ukraine. I think he's just out of his mind.

What do you think about Ukraine's Right Sector party, and Dmytro Yarosh, their front-runner for president?
Pravy Sektor was made up of a bunch of Ukrainians that were ready to actually fight. The protest on Maidan was mostly peaceful and most of the people were not ready to fight the police. There was a lot of people thinking that they will be there as long as they need, but they will not fight. On the other hand, those guys were ready for it.

How does what's happening now relate to the Orange Revolution of 2004-05?
During the Orange Revolution, people were fighting against Yanukovych. That is why they were supporting the other party, just because it was in opposition to Yanukovych. But it turned out people didn't really know what they were going for. So they got disappointed, and that's how Yanukovych won the elections. They believed that the opposition would fight the corruption, set reforms, would change their lives in a better way. But it never happened, so that's why this time people were not supporting any politician. They were there for themselves.

Is there a big split between people in Crimea and the rest of Ukraine?
Oh yeah. People in Crimea don't think they are Ukrainian. A lot of them aren't. There was a lot of Russians imported into Crimea after the natives were deported out of Crimea. It started in the '40s when Stalin started deporting Tartars from Crimea. A lot of them got killed, more than a third of them died in deportation, and only a small percentage came back. So now there's only 12 percent Tartars in Crimea.

What do you think about former prime minister Yulia Tymoshenko? Is she someone you think people would want to come to power?
I think that Tymoshenko is a dictator herself. But she is smarter than Yanukovych, because she's the one that tells you everything you want to hear. She knows how to deal with everyone. She might find a good compromise. But I'm afraid of her, I don't believe her, she's corrupted as well. If I have no choice, I will vote for her — but I don't want to.

What do you think about Russians who say they are being enclosed upon by the EU and the West and that's why they are trying to force Ukraine to stay out of it, to protect their economic interests?
Of course it's a fight over money. But if I have to fight in the battle, I'll chose the side that supports human rights and freedoms. Not the one that pushes people down.

What does having Ukraine join the EU mean to you?
To me, it's having a democracy in my country. That's very important. I could never live in a dictatorship.

Here in America we have democracy, but everything's still run by whoever has the most money. But at least you can talk about it! Nobody's going to kill you.

Do you think Putin will successfully annex Crimea?
Yeah, I think he will eventually get Crimea. But I just hope he will not get the rest. He doesn't believe it's a country, that's the issue. He thinks it's like California for Obama.

… Ever since Ukraine was trying to get away from the Russian empire, there's been this issue of Ukraine wanting to be independent. So when the Soviets got in power, they had to create this myth that Ukraine was a little something, unimportant, just a piece of Russia. That Ukrainian language never existed, that Ukrainian language is just a dialect of Russian language. It's a little bit offensive, it just makes me feel like I have no land, I have no country.

I really think that this whole situation, no matter how it ends, Ukraine will be the winner, because then we'll be more united, we'll be more independent from Russia, we'll get out of this situation in a better state than we were before. Ukrainians are not used to being patriarchs. This revolution is the revolution of their minds.

SEPTA GM ON PAINTING, SMOKING

Looking at the subway tunnel walls, I noticed how they are painted a dingy black! Obviously that's paint to cover up graffiti, but how about a lighter, more vibrant color? It would make the subway more pleasant and make it easier for the operator to see.

JAY BUNKLE

The Broad Street Line's station walls are typically dark at the bottom because it is very labor intensive to keep them clean near the track area. The compromise has been to paint the lower half dark and the upper half white. We have also experimented with plastic panels at some spots, and will continue to do so because we agree they are the answer to presenting a brighter platform area. However, the tunnel walls between stations on the Market Frankford Line and Sub-Surface will remain unpainted or black. This is to both reduce the costs to maintain and cover graffiti.

Quoted

SEPTA is in the process of seeking legislation to prohibit smoking on all owned/leased properties.

I am wondering what SEPTA's policy is regarding the enforcement of the nonsmoking rules on the various platforms? I often see SEPTA employees walk right past people smoking on the platforms at 30th Street and 69th Street without saying anything. Are they advised to avoid confrontation regarding this issue?

BRYAN MCCORMICK

Signs are posted in many locations as a rider courtesy reminder. Unfortunately, the law prohibiting smoking does not apply to all areas used by SEPTA's riders. Employees tend to know where the illegal areas are and understand that there is no legal basis to ask the smoker to stop. SEPTA is in the process of seeking legislation to prohibit smoking on all owned/leased properties.

On the Regional Rail Airport line, I noticed there is only one crossover, just as you enter. Have you considered possibly installing a crossover track between Terminals C and D and Terminals E and F? I think it would help improve the traffic flow.

ANONYMOUS

Based on the current 30 minutes between trains, the location of the Airport Junctions (crossover tracks under Terminal 1) provide a sufficient balance between operational flexibility and maintenance costs. In cooperation with the Department of Aviation, we prioritize Track No. 2 (adjacent to the Taxi Road) for more convenient access to the baggage area for both inbound and outbound passengers at Terminals A through E/F. Should the operating patterns or service frequency need to change, we could look at an additional crossover; however, track geometry would make it very difficult to maintain.

Mystery. Brothers uncover Irish laborer secrets of grave site

On a cold winter's day, historian Bill Watson found himself standing in the snow, picking through the roots of an upturned stump near railroad tracks in a place now known as Duffy's Cut.

The stump, pulled up several years ago, stood over the final resting place of seven of 57 Irish laborers who perished at the railroad construction site in 1832, during an outbreak of cholera.

"It's not just cholera," said Watson, who with his twin brother and fellow historian, Frank Watson, is leading the excavation project near Malvern.

For the last 10 years, the Watsons and their research team have struggled to find out what happened to the crew.

In 2002, they discovered references to the immigrant laborers in a document file compiled nearly a century ago by Pennsylvania Railroad president Martin Clement and later kept by his personal assistant — the Watsons' grandfather.

Those documents indicated that all 57 laborers, hired right off the boat from Ireland, died of cholera within six weeks of arrival. The number was far more than the eight deaths listed in local news.

While the cause appeared to be cholera, physical evidence uncovered at the scene also hinted at cruelty and murder, the Watson brothers said.

Ground-penetrating radar found what researchers believe is the grave site on land now owned by Amtrak. Excavating there could yield vital clues. But the project has stalled while awaiting permission from the rail company to dig near its tracks. REUTERS

What they uncovered

- In 2004, the team found pipe shards and old forks. Then, in 2009, the team found a human tibia, or shin bone.
- In all, they found the remains of seven people — all near the old poplar tree — three exhibiting signs of having met a violent end. Exactly who killed them is not known.

Quoted

"We have no idea what percentage of these guys were murdered. But if we have 57, it's the worst mass murder in Pennsylvania history."

JAL plane makes emergency landing in Honolulu

A Japan Airlines-operated Boeing 787 made an emergency landing at Honolulu Airport after oil pressure in its right engine dropped, the Japanese carrier said.

The jetliner en route to San Francisco from Tokyo diverted to Honolulu, landed on Saturday with 160 passengers on board, a spokesman for JAL said.

The jet is the same one on which a battery melted and emitted smoke at Boston's Logan airport in January last year. A subsequent battery overheating on a 787 owned by ANA Holdings several days later prompted regulators to ground the global fleet of carbon composite 787s for more than three months. REUTERS

Missing Malaysian jet may have disintegrated in mid-air

Officials investigating the disappearance of a Malaysia Airlines jetliner with 239 people on board suspect it may have disintegrated in mid-flight, a senior source said on Sunday, as Vietnam reported a possible sighting of wreckage from the plane.

International police agency Interpol confirmed that at least two passports recorded in its database as lost or stolen were used by passengers on the flight, raising suspicions of foul play.

An Interpol spokeswoman said a check of all documents used to board the plane had revealed more "suspect passports" that were being further investigated. She was unable to say how many, or from which country or countries.

Quoted

"On the possibility of hijack, we are not ruling out any possibility."

Azharuddin Abdul Rahman
Malaysian civil aviation chief

"The fact that we are unable to find any debris so far appears to indicate that the aircraft is likely to have disintegrated at around 35,000 feet," a source involved in the investigations in Malaysia told Reuters.

If the plane had plunged intact from close to its cruising altitude, breaking up only on impact with the water, search teams would have expected to find a fairly concentrated pattern of debris, said the source, speaking on condition of anonymity because he was not authorized to discuss the investigation publicly.

Asked about the possibility of an explosion, such as a bomb, the source said there was no evidence yet of foul play and that the aircraft could have broken up due to mechanical causes. REUTERS

Home simulator

Pilot is an aviation tech geek

The pilot of the jet that went missing enjoyed flying the Boeing 777 so much that he spent his off days tinkering with a flight simulator of the plane that he had set up at home, current and former co-workers said.

Zaharie Ahmad Shah, 53, had always wanted to become a pilot and joined the national carrier in 1981.

Airline staff who worked with the pilot said Zaharie knew the ins and outs of the Boeing 777 extremely well, as he was always practicing with the simulator. REUTERS

California. Two dozen students injured in school stage collapse

Two dozen students in Southern California were injured when a packed stage collapsed during a performance at a high school, police said Sunday.

More than 200 students were onstage when the front portion of the platform gave way during a Saturday night production at Servite High School, a private Catholic school in Anaheim, about 25 miles south of Los Angeles.

Twenty-four students were transferred to local hospitals with non-life threatening injuries including scrapes, bruises and broken noses, according to Anaheim Police Department spokesman Lt. Steve Schmidt. REUTERS

Three dead in Ohio nightclub shooting

An unidentified gunman opened fire inside an Ohio nightclub early on Sunday, killing three people including an off-duty police officer, authorities said.

A fourth person was wounded at the Last Call Saloon in Fremont, 40 miles south of Toledo, and authorities were searching for the shooter, Fremont police said.

The gunman fired at least four shots, killing a 25-year-old bartender, a 24-year-old patron and a 26-year-old man identified as an off-duty police officer from the nearby village of Elmore, according to Fremont Police Chief Timothy Wiersma. REUTERS

Rand Paul to decide on 2016 White House run after midterm elections

Rand Paul / GETTY IMAGES

Victorious. Paul won a straw poll of activists at the Conservative Political Action Conference.

Republican Rand Paul said on Sunday he was preparing for a possible run for the presidency in 2016 but would not make a final decision until after the November midterm elections.

One day after winning a preference poll of conservative activists, the Kentucky senator said his libertarian message of protection for civil liberties could help the GOP grow by attracting young people and minorities.

"We do the things that would be necessary to make sure that it can happen and will work. But I truly haven't made my mind up and won't make my mind up until after the 2014 elections," Paul said on "Fox News Sunday" of a run for the presidency.

Paul told the conference on Friday that President Barack Obama was trampling personal liberties with programs like the National Security Agency's electronic surveillance and offered a strong defense of Fourth Amendment constitutional rights against unreasonable searches and seizures.

"The youth in particular have lost faith in this president, and so I think there's a real opportunity for Republicans who do believe in the Fourth Amendment to grow our party by attracting young people," Paul told Fox. REUTERS

Cruz control

Paul won the CPAC straw poll with 31 percent of the vote, well ahead of second-place finisher Republican Senator Ted Cruz of Texas, who had 11 percent.

"We're definitely talking about it, my family's talking about it."

Paul said on "Fox News Sunday" of a run for the presidency.

Republicans press Medicare attack in Congressional elections

Republicans, looking for ways to turn November's congressional elections into a referendum on President Barack Obama's signature health care law, are trying to portray Obamacare as a danger to Medicare.

The aim is to court one of the biggest and most reliable voting blocs in midterm elections — senior citizens and people near retirement — by depicting Republicans as defenders of the federal health care program for 42 million seniors.

It's an attempt to turn the tables on Democrats, who in the 2012 presidential election attacked Republican Mitt Romney over Republican proposals to overhaul Medicare.

DEMOCRAT ALEX SINK IS IN A HOTLY CONTESTED RACE IN FLORIDA WITH DAVID JOLLY.

GETTY IMAGES

Quoted

"They're tripping over themselves. The public knows the government is to blame and that the government is controlled by Democrats."

Andrea Bozek, National Republican Congressional Committee

"You'd have to be a blind man in a dark room not to see the political implications of Obamacare in general and now specifically with respect to Medicare," said Brock McCleary, former polling director for the RNC.

The strategy faces an early test in Tuesday's special U.S. House election in Florida, where analysts say Republican David Jolly and his allies are using Medicare in an 11th-hour effort to create an Obamacare liability for Democrat Alex Sink among older residents who make up 45 percent of the local population.

The final rate won't be set until April. But a new Florida TV ad attacking Sink is already telling seniors what to expect: "To pay for Obamacare, Washington is forcing seniors to endure deep cuts to Medicare Advantage."

"Sadly, Alex Sink supports these cuts, sticking with Nancy Pelosi, who wants to keep Obamacare intact," a narrator says as a washed-out photo of Sink appears alongside images of the House Democratic leader and the Capitol under darkening skies.

Merkel raps Putin as forces tighten grip on Crimea

Germany's Angela Merkel delivered a rebuke to President Vladimir Putin on Sunday, telling him that a planned Moscow-backed referendum on whether Crimea should join Russia was illegal and violated Ukraine's constitution.

Putin defended breakaway moves by pro-Russian leaders in Crimea, where Russian forces tightened their grip on the Ukrainian region by seizing another border post.

As thousands staged rival rallies in Crimea, street violence flared in Sebastopol, when pro-Russian activists and Cossacks attacked a group of Ukrainians.

Russian forces' seizure of the Black Sea peninsula has been bloodless, but tensions are mounting following the decision by pro-Russian groups there to make Crimea part of Russia. REUTERS

In the latest armed action, Russians took over a Ukrainian border post on the western edge of Crimea, trapping about 15 personnel inside, a border guard spokesman said.

Four new gases that harm ozone layer found, despite bans

Scientists have detected four new man-made gases that damage the Earth's protective ozone layer, despite bans on almost all production of similar gases under a 1987 treaty, a study showed on Sunday.

The experts were trying to pinpoint industrial sources of tiny traces of the new gases, perhaps used in making pesticides or refrigerants, that were found in Greenland's ice and in air samples in Tasmania, Australia.

The ozone layer shields the planet from damaging ultra-violet rays, which can cause skin cancer and eye cataracts, and has been recovering after a phase-out of damaging chemicals under the U.N.'s 1987 Montreal Protocol. REUTERS

Julian Assange to SXSW crowd: NSA is a 'rogue agency'

Prelude. There will be a similar webcast with Edward Snowden today.

Julian Assange appeared at SXSW's Interactive conference Saturday via Skype, addressing thousands of attendees from Ecuador's embassy in London. It was a rare public appearance for the embattled WikiLeaks co-founder.

A good deal of Assange's panel focused on U.S. spying whistleblower Edward Snowden's former employer, the National Security Agency. Snowden is due to speak today.

"The NSA has grown to be a rogue agency. It has grown to be unfettered," Assange told an interviewer. "The ability to surveil everyone on the planet is almost there, and arguably will be there within a few years. And that's led to a huge transfer of power from the people who are surveilled upon, to those who control the surveillance complex."

Assange took particular issue with new legislative measures in the U.S. to "stop publication of material about" the NSA. "There is a really serious attempt to try and stop these revelations and others, and introduce a new international regime of censorship," he said. "The laws that apply to the Internet apply to human society. This penetration of the Internet by the NSA ... is the penetration of our human society. It means there has been a militarization of our civilian space."

"We have to do something about it. All of us have to do something about it," Assange said.

Quoted

"We are now all involved in this. We are all involved in what we traditionally called the state, whether we like it or not. So we have no choice but to try to manage the behavior of the state that we have been forced to be part of." Assange

THE REAL CHAMPIONS OF SOCHI

Tara Lipinski and Johnny Weir stole the show in Sochi. "When we start talking we don't really stop," Weir says. / GETTY IMAGES

With their sassy, on-point figure skating commentary, drool-worthy couture and adorable Instagram posts (they love to spoon!), Johnny Weir and Tara Lipinski took the Olympics by storm — again.

"I think we were both happily surprised [by the attention]," Lipinski told us at a kickoff for the Paralympic Winter Games on Friday in NYC. "We were the rookies and we had to prove ourselves, so it was really nice to come home and see the reception that we got."

The pros were "in a bubble" during their time in Sochi, Weir says, so they didn't really know about the positive reaction to their work until they returned home.

"We didn't think anyone was watching, and there's a brilliance to being a bit naive to what's going on," he says. "It's very liberating."

And figure skating's most fabulous duo have no plans to slow down now. The two did Oscars coverage for NBC and hope to be commentators at the Winter Olympics four years from now ("We'll have to see," Lipinski says). They're also ready and willing to offer their insight on other matters.

"We have an opinion about everything," Weir says. "Despite being figure skaters and knowing what we're talking about specifically, we've got opinions on a lot. So show us VMAs. Show us Golf Channel. Show us the Kentucky Derby."

SARA EVANS

The country singer is back with her seventh studio album, "Slow Me Down."

NO SLOWING HER DOWN

ROBERT ASCROFT

Sara Evans is frazzled. Like any mom, she spent the morning trying to get her kids ready so she could make it out the door on time for work. But unlike many other moms, the job that she holds is country superstar. Her seventh studio album, "Slow Me Down," drops tomorrow. Evans rang us from her tour bus.

This is your seventh studio album. Does the process ever get easier?
I watch the charts weekly and just so desire success. You put so much into making your records and all the details that can either be not even recognized or can take your career to the next level. You never know how a single is gonna be received. I was worried about our genre right now being so male-dominated. I was like, "Are they gonna give me a slot?" And they did. … It's always scary: No matter how many albums you put out, how much success you've had, you never want anything to fail.

There's a cover of Gavin DeGraw's "Not Over You" on this disc. How did that come about?
It was one of my favorite songs of that time, and I think almost every album since [2000's] "Born to Fly," I've put a cover tune on. I was just thinking what kind of song, out of the millions of songs out there, would I want to cover? I don't know why it came to me to do that one. Something about the lyrics — that song moved me so much, and it sounds so much like a Sara Evans song.

You're in a wedding dress in the video for your first single, "Slow Me Down."
It's just symbolic. It's almost me saying, "Why did I marry him? If it doesn't change I'm going to have to leave, but I really want him to stop me." And every girl loves the idea of — not in the way of playing games, but just: "If I told you I was leaving you, would you chase me? Would you try to stop me?" I completely related to that song because everybody wants to be pursued. Guys do, too!

What was your mind-set when you were working on this disc?
If an actor chooses to play the part of a wife-beating, drug-addicted thief, that doesn't mean that in their personal lives they're thinking those dark things. It's acting. With me that's what I love about going into the studio and creating these songs, because I'm completely acting.

It must be hard to constantly defend yourself to people who think you're writing about your life.
Yeah. When I write songs I go into a fantasy world, writing things that I think would make great music. I write something that I think would move people. I don't mirror things that I'm writing or recording.

On the opposite end of the spectrum are artists like Taylor Swift.
Exactly. She's definitely one of those personal writers. Or so she says — who knows? She could totally be like, "I never had a boyfriend." [Laughs]

Rapper's delight

Beyond country

Who's an artist people would be surprised to know you listen to?
I love rap. I love Eminem. To be honest with you I don't really listen to country like you would think because it makes me think about work too much. I also listen to what my kids want to listen to.

Is your child getting enough sleep?

Researchers at Temple University are conducting a study to test an approach for helping children get a good night's sleep.

To be eligible, your child must:

- Be 8 - 11 years old
- Sleep 9.5 hours or less each night

All families will learn how to improve their child's sleep and will be compensated for their time.

'Cosmos' is back after a 34-year hiatus

See more at www.metro.us

Science. We talk to host Neil deGrasse Tyson and writer Ann Druyan about their new show "Cosmos: A Space-Time Odyssey."

Neil deGrasse Tyson and writer Ann Druyan debuted their new science show, "Cosmos: A Spacetime Odyssey," last night. / PATRICK ECCELSINE, FOX

Do you remember the TV show "Cosmos: A Personal Voyage"? It's been 34 years, so you might have forgotten. But now the show is back with 13 brand new episodes.

For the next 12 Sundays, astrophysicist Dr. Neil deGrasse Tyson will try to teach us more about science and the universe in "Cosmos: A Spacetime Odyssey," on Fox. Ann Druyan will be writing, producing and directing the series, as she did with the first show more than 30 years ago. She's the widow of astrophysicist Carl Sagan, who hosted the original series in the '80s.

There couldn't be a better time for a comeback, Tyson and Druyan agree. With science-based shows like "The Big Bang Theory" and movies like "Gravity" surging in popularity, Tyson is sure that people will show interest in the show.

"There is an unserved curiosity for the world around us that manifests in several ways," says Tyson.

"Cosmos" is a way to bring science down to Earth, so to speak.

"I believe we are a story-driven species and that we understand how things are put together in the context of narrative," says Druyan. "I think it's a shame that science hasn't been taught that way in a long time."

The first episode premiered on 21st Century Fox's channels, including Fox, National Geographic Channel, FX and more, where it will continue to air Sundays at 9 p.m. On Mondays, starting today, the show will re-air on the National Geographic Channel with bonus footage.

Help from a famous friend

Funnyman Seth MacFarlane is one of the reasons why this show is back. He was big fan of the original show, and after he learned that Druyan and Tyson wanted to do a new season, he helped them present the idea to 21st Century Fox, who gave it the green light.

"Billy on the Street" premieres on Fuse, Wednesday at 11 p.m. / FUSE

Television. Comic Billy Eichner's interview style has actually helped him burn a lot of calories.

Metro messes with Texas

This week, Metro goes to Austin, Texas, for SXSW, a conference that features the newest in interactive, film and music. Read all about Ned Ehrbar's first experience there at www.metro.us. Be sure to check out Pat Healy's music coverage later this week.

Comedian Billy Eichner is back with a third season of his irreverent guerrilla quiz show, "Funny or Die's Billy on the Street," debuting March 12 at 11 p.m. EST on Fuse. To celebrate, he's in Austin, Texas, for SXSW — for as little time as possible, he insists.

What's your take on being at SXSW?
I hate it! [Laughs] ... I'm glad we're doing our event on Monday, when it's a little more chilled out. That first weekend, it's basically like New York and L.A. and Chicago — everyone converges on Austin. It's a lot. It's hectic.

How often do you run into people who just expect you to be in character like that?
Um … every day, all the time. [Laughs] And you know, I totally understand it, and I'm happy to report to them that I'm not that way all the time, that it's a character, obviously, and no one could live that way. ... I'm just your average gay Jew. What can I tell you?

You run a lot on the show.
Yes, I burned a lot of calories. I needed to point out that between Season 2 and Season 3 I lost a lot of weight. That was the only point of me signing on to do it again. ... I would like to put "Billy on the Street" in the rainforests. ... It's probably going to be mostly running, me running around by myself or taking a nap near a tree.
NED EHRBAR

Box office

New '300' gym addicts call it a draw with talking dog

The action film "300: Rise of an Empire" battled its way to $45 million in ticket sales to win the weekend box office race, slashing its way past the animated film "Mr. Peabody & Sherman."

"Mr. Peabody & Sherman," based on the "Peabody's Improbable History" segments of the 1960s animated TV show starring the characters Rocky and Bullwinkle, collected ticket sales of $32.5 million at U.S. and Canadian theaters.

Last week's box office winner, "Non-Stop," was third with $15.4 million in sales. "The Lego Movie" took the No. 4 spot with $11 million. The animated hit based on the colorful blocks has now totaled $225 million since its Feb. 7 release.

Rounding out the Top 5, "Son of God," based on "The Bible" television mini-series, collected $10 million.

March 11-16
Merriam Theater
250 S. Broad St.
$25-$75, 215-893-1999
www.kimmelcenter.org

A high-wire act

Feats. "Cirkopolis" is a dystopian show, but with acrobats.

"Cirkopolis" tumbles into the Merriam Theater.

In an era where many circus stage shows seem to blindly swing for the faster, higher and bigger, the Montreal-based Cirque Eloize is slowing things down a bit.

The group's new show, "Cirkopolis," drew rave reviews when it was recently staged in New York City. "There are much bigger shows than 'Cirkopolis,'" swooned the New York Times. "But I'd bet there aren't more beautiful ones."

"What we try to do is find the right balance between the spectacular and the sensitive," says Cirque Eloize founder Jeannot Painchaud on the phone from Montreal. "I'm always looking for something that can touch people and move people and make them think. I'm going to their soul and heart and I'm searching for that balance."

Be it on a high-wire — or not.

Cirque Eloize, whose shows include the Broadway hit "Rain," comes back to town with "Cirkopolis." (Three performances of the Philly run were cancelled "due to unforeseen circumstances," according to a statement from a theater rep; ticket holders can exchange their tickets for any of the remaining performances or they will automatically receive a refund on their credit card.)

As for what's onstage, Painchaud, along with co-director Dave St-Pierre, looked to the Fritz Lang dystopian silent film classic "Metropolis" for inspiration.

"This fella is an office worker and he starts to dream about a life that is closer to who he is," Painchaud says. "He's going to contaminate the city with his poetry."

It's a serious concept at its base, but not an overly serious presentation.

"He slowly wakes up the people around him and very quickly the show becomes funny and very light," Painchaud says. "Maybe it looks like a dark show, but it's not."

WHEN HONESTY ISN'T THE BEST POLICY

No Insurance Necessary

KIM SCHNEIDERMAN, MSW, LCSW

NOVEL-PERSPECTIVE.COM

Kim Schneiderman's book "Step Out of Your Story: Writing Exercises to Reframe and Transform Your Life," is due to be published in the spring. Email Kim your questions at askkim@metro.us.

A friend of mine often complains about her boyfriend, but hardly ever recognizes her role in their problems. When she came crying to me for sympathy recently after a big spat, I gave her my honest opinion about one of her behaviors that I thought was contributing to the situation. She told me I wasn't being supportive. How do I support her but not be disingenuous?

It can be difficult to hold one's tongue when one sees a friend continuously engaging in self-sabotaging behaviors. When put in a similar situation, many people often feel like they have three options — being brutally honest, remaining silent or telling people what they think they want to hear. Often, none of these options feels particularly satisfying.

Yet, there is time and place for honesty, as well as a way to be sincere that is compassionate, transparent, constructive and respectful of the other person's feelings. First, you need to examine your motivations by asking yourself the following questions:

1 What is the purpose of being honest? Is it to genuinely help the person or is there another motivation, like an ego-driven need to be right or an obsession with transparency? Or perhaps you just want your friend to stop bothering you with complaints. A client of mine has an almost obsessive need to express whatever is on his mind at all times because he grew up feeling censored by his family. While his inclination is understandable, his difficulty using discretion often rubs people the wrong way.

3 If you feel your friend is ready to listen, and the timing is right, ask her if she'd like feedback. Explain that you care about her and want her to be happy, but are concerned that certain patterns are getting in her way. If she agrees, be sure to clothe your words in love and kindness, remembering that it's not easy for anyone to hear criticism, even if it's constructive.

Metro does not endorse the opinions of the author.

SOMETIMES BEING COMPASSIONATE TRUMPS BEING BRUTALLY HONEST. COLOURBOX

Tip 2

If you are sincerely trying to help, ask yourself whether you think the person is ready and capable of hearing what have to say. Timing is everything. Sometimes, people's defenses interfere with their being able to digest what might be insightful feedback. In highly emotional situations, compassion trumps honesty. If they can't hear you, sometimes it's best to let it go and trust that life will one day present them with other chances to learn their lesson.

Bliss. Study says your mind may have power over your appetite

Call it the "happy meal" diet.

A study conducted by Cornell University has found that a person's mood affects what kind and how much food he or she consumes.

The study was the subject of a paper called "Better Moods for Better Eating: How Mood Influences Food Choice," which was published in the Journal of Consumer Psychology.

"People use food to either maintain a good mood or regain a good mood," Brian Wansink, a professor at Cornell and co-author of the paper, said in a release. "And if you're already in a good mood, you tend to eat more healthfully than if you're in a bad mood."

The authors suggest that people in a bad mood may not realize what damage they are doing in the long haul when they overindulge.

"Before [eating], think of something that makes you happy or grateful, and you'll eat less and better," said Wansink.

Doorway Chest & Shoulder Stretch

This week's tip comes from Bethany Lyons, SoulCycle instructor and founder of Lyons Den Power Yoga.

Feeling stuck? Sitting at a computer all day? This may help release stagnation.

At a doorway, place arms out to sides, at chest level, with a 90-degree bend, palms touching the doorway. Lunge forward until you feel a slight stretch in the chest. Breathe into the stretch to go deeper while you keep your hips under your shoulders and your shoulders down and relaxed. Hold for five deep breaths. Switch legs. METRO

Changes to the SAT may make the test more egalitarian, but some are skeptical. / MONKEY BUSINESS IMAGES

Switching up the SAT

Pencils down. For a test that is a student's first step into college, the definition is changing.

Adumbrate, legerdemain, obstreperous: Students can breathe a sigh of relief as ornate SAT words are tossed aside as one of many changes announced by the College Board. Two years from now, students will begin taking the redesigned test, and experts say it's a step in the right direction.

The revisions make sense overall, according to Dr. Karen Pennington, vice president of campus development and student life at Montclair University. "I like those passages using works such as The Declaration of Independence or the Federalist papers students should know and be reminded of."

Overseeing admissions at Montclair, she mentions the College Board is also addressing aspects that simply didn't work. "The change to the total score is one that never worked, it never quite caught on."

Cha-cha-changes

- Maximum scores will change from 2400 back to 1600.
- The essay will become optional.
- Impressive SAT words will be replaced by commonly used words.
- Each exam will include passages from the Founding Documents of America or the Great Global Conversation.
- Students must support answers with evidence.
- Scoring will not deduct points for incorrect answers.
- The math section will cover fewer topics.
- The new exam will be offered online in addition to paper.

Neither did the essay, which was added to the test in 2005 to raise potential scores to 2400; now it's becoming optional as scores revert back to 1600. "Those changes led to a decline in the last nine years when the ACT overcame," points out Bob Schaeffer, public education director of FairTest, a testing watchdog organization.

The College Board is also hoping to level the uneven financial playing field regarding test preparation accessibility. The announcement referenced a partnership in conjunction with Khan Academy for free online test preparation materials launching next spring.

Seppy Basili, vice president of Kaplan Test Prep says he thinks test updates will lead to more fairness since it's more in alignment with what students actually learn in school. And he also says not to worry: "Now is not a moment to panic. It's a little early," Basili says. Instead of freaking out about the overhaul, think about "understanding the content, having a strategy and being confident."

Tips. Get some solid advice that any college student should know

There's so much to figure out when you're in college. We talk to Blair Thornburgh, author of "Stuff Every College Student Should Know," out March 25, about her best tips to surviving college bank account and sanity intact.

Blair Thornburgh has some real talk for college students.
PROVIDED

Take notes

"Pay attention to anything that's written on the board. The teacher is not going to put something on the board that doesn't matter. It's also important to write down any questions that might come up in a discussion. It could be something you will think about when you're reading. Write down all dates and formulas. These things are easy to forget, so put them on paper so you have a record of it."

The almighty all-nighter

"Monitor your caffeine and drink water instead of Red Bull. It helps you stay awake better, because when you have to go to the bathroom all the time you won't fall asleep. It's also helpful to break the time down. It can be terrifying to think of writing 12 pages in six hours. Just think about working 45 minutes straight and then write a page and a half. If you break it down into smaller chunks, it's more manageable."

Talk it out

Getting along

"So much of college is social. A lot of people need to get away from that sometimes. If you don't feel like you can go to your room, it's going to be very stressful. It's a good idea not to assume that you're going to be your roommates' best friend. It's really important to talk, too, so you don't build up resentment. Plan out what you want to say before you bring up an issue. And if it's really bad, you should get help from your residential staff."

Money saver

"The most important thing is to not buy the books new from the campus bookstore. They're just going to rip you off. The books can be pretty easy to find online if you have the ISBN. Make sure you also look around on foreign sites. Then you can sell the books when you're done with them. If it's a big textbook you're doing for a huge class and you have a study group, you can split the book. You can also make an arrangement with someone you know who's going to take the class next semester."

Jobs Advice

DAN SCHAWBEL
DANSCHAWBEL.COM
Dan Schawbel is a Gen Y career expert, the founder of Millennial Branding and the author of the New York Times best-selling "The New Rules of Career Success."

If you aren't a remote worker right now, chances are, you might be in the future. A new study by the work lifestyle company Flex Strategy Group and Quest Diagnostics found that 31 percent of full-time employees in the U.S. (about 8 million people) do most of their work from a location other than their employer's site. Though many workers romanticize about working from home, it's much harder than it seems.

I spent four years working remotely and ended up renting office space because it was getting in the way of human interaction. I spoke with Cali Williams Yost, founder of Flex Strategy Group, to get her tips for remote workers.

Make priorities

As a remote worker, you need to take the initiative to manage yourself instead of relying on your boss to do it for you. "Identify the small, meaningful actions that will help you be your best, at work and in your personal life, whether its completing an important project, getting enough sleep or eating healthy meals," Yost suggests.

Update regularly

One of the biggest concerns managers have with remote workers is that they may be distracted. Your manager will trust you if you make sure he or she is aware that you are doing work and exceeding expectations. "Send your manager a quick weekly 'highlights' list of accomplishments," says Yost.

— Metro does not endorse the opinions of the author.

Watercooler

Go to the office

Face-time is still the best way to build relationships with the people you work with. "Make it a point to go into your employer's workplace regularly," says Yost. Nothing will replace in-person visits where people can get to know you on a personal level.

Not your mom's jeans

RE: 'Spring trend: Mom jeans' (March 6, 2014) The jeans featured in your article were '80s high-waisted jeans, not mom jeans. Mom jeans were shapeless with an elastic waist and baggy from the hip-flexers up to the waist; the point being you can give up now that you have settled down. I am relieved that they are not making a comeback for moms or fashionistas. DIANE B, VIA EMAIL

Foreman's follies

RE: 'Russia's Rules' (March 7, 2014) Why do you publish the mediocrity dished out by "political correspondent" Tom Foreman? His points are often laughable and his pieces riddled with factual errors. Take his last one, for example. He says: "Sixty percent of Crimea's population speaks Russian as a first language." Wrong! It's 77 percent. (He was confusing ethnic background with native language.) He also says: "Crimea was part of Russia for 300 years before it was given to Ukraine in 1954." Crimea was part of the Russian Empire since 1783, but then again so was Ukraine, even before that. When the Soviet Union set up Ukraine and the other Soviet Socialist Republics in 1922, Crimea remained part of Russia. PASQUALE TATO, CAMBRIDGE, MA

Villanova, Pinkston have come long way

NCAA. Villanova and JayVaughn Pinkston hope the Big East regular season title is just the start of a fruitful postseason.

When the freshly crowned regular season champions from Villanova head to the Big Apple and Madison Square Garden this week for the Big East Tournament, likely no one will enjoy the trip more than JayVaughn Pinkston.

After all, it wasn't that long ago his career seemed to be headed down a path to nowhere.

As a redshirt freshman two years ago, he averaged 9.6 points and 5.2 rebounds on a 13-19 Villanova team, by far the poorest in Jay Wright's 12-year tenure on the Main Line.

The reason Pinkston was redshirted? He'd been suspended from school the previous year for an off-campus incident involving a physical altercation.

The rust in his game was evident that season as the losses piled up. Uncertainty grew if the kid who'd been a sensation at Brooklyn's Bishop Loughlin High was really as good as advertised.

If it bothered him, Pinkston kept it inside and just allowed his skills to develop. So did the rest of his teammates.

That's what makes the transformation they've made in just two years, going from 13-19 to 28-3 after dismantling Georgetown 77-59 Saturday, all the more remarkable.

"Wow, it's unbelievable," Pinkston, who scored 13 points Saturday, said. "Coming from where we came from to now — 28 wins and bringing home the championship — is tremendous. But this is not the end for us. We want to go up there and be Conference tournament champion also."

And what better place to do it than home for the rugged 6-foot-7, 240-pound Pinkston?

"I'm not really sure what it will be like," Pinkston said. "I know a lot of my family's gonna come, but I don't really worry about that. I'll just focus on the next game, whoever our opponent is. Whatever happens, happens."

Whatever happens in the Big East tournament or once the NCAA's Big Dance gets underway next week, Pinkston has already shown he can handle it. But if there's any sense of vindication, any "I told you so" running through his mind, he's keeping it to himself.

"What's done is done," Pinkston said, "I'm just trying to move on from that, get a new start. What we've accomplished, it's satisfying. But it's not the end. We're still working, and I'm still working to be the best player I can be."

By the numbers

The post-loving Pinkston shoots at a clip of 52.7 percent from the field, second best on the Wildcats.

NCAA. St. Joseph's on the bubble, Temple finishes season strong

Of the six city basketball programs, just two appear headed to the NCAA tournament next week.

Villanova is ranked No. 6 in the country and has already won the Big East's regular season crown. But in the Atlantic 10, St. Joseph's appears to be a clear bubble team.

According to ESPN's Joe Lunardi, the Hawks are among the "last four in," along with Xavier, BYU and Oregon.

If the tournament started today, Lunardi has St. Joes as a No. 11 seed. But that is assuming they don't falter in this weekend's Atlantic 10 tournament.

The Hawks are seeded in the No. 4 spot and will get a double-bye into the quarterfinals at the Barclays Center in Brooklyn.

The Explorers have an outside chance of making the tournament, but with a 15-15 record, they will need to win the A-10 tournament outright.

La Salle pulled off a big victory over St. Joes Sunday to end the season and earn the eight-seed. They face St. Bonaventure Thursday at noon.

Temple had an awful regular season, and though they came on with a few big wins down the stretch, they will need to go all the way in the AAC tournament to get a berth in the NCAA's.

The Owls will need to defeat Central Florida on Wednesday, a 9:30 p.m. start on ESPN 2, and then No. 1-seed Cincinnati just to make the semifinals. They will need to win four straight games to make the Big Dance.

Drexel and Penn are both eliminated from making the NCAA tournament. The Dragons faltered in the Colonial's second round to Northeastern while the Ivy League — won by Harvard — has no conference tournament.

Waiting for Sunday

Villanova not concerned with NCAA seeding

With just under a week remaining until the NCAA Selection Committee announces the 2014 March Madness bracket, teams like Villanova know they will be playing in the Big Dance. They just don't know where and against whom.

Ranked No. 6 in the country as of Sunday afternoon, the Wildcats could make an argument for a No. 1 seed, especially if they make a deep run in the Bid East Tournament this weekend.

But Wildcats' head coach Jay Wright isn't thinking about that yet — nor are his players.

"We don't really think about anything else," said JayVaughn Pinkston, on a team that will only lose one player — leading scorer James Bell — for next season. "Coach preaches to just worry about next game. It makes sense. You can't get caught up in the other stuff and we could lose our next game and be done — just like that."

Villanova will be in action as the top overall seed when the Big East Tournament's second round begins at noon Thursday.

The Wildcats will play the winner of Wednesday's Seton Hall vs. Butler game.

Every tournament game will appear on Fox Sports 1. JON MARKS

Famous father

Director's son impresses in spring training

Kelly Dugan, the Phillies first pick in the 2009 draft, has an unusual background for a ballplayer. His dad is director Dennis Dugan, known for directing every Adam Sandler film.

"It was a cool way to grow up," Dugan said of his early life in Hollywood. "Sure, I've gotten to know Adam and Kevin [James] and the rest of those guys. My dad has a cool job."

Dugan, 23, has a pretty good gig as well. He credits his father, a lifelong baseball fan, for helping him achieve his dream.

"My dad pitched to me all the time when I was a kid," Dugan said. "He helped me get where I am. It's great that my dad loves baseball. ... He couldn't be prouder of me."

Biddle offers Phillies a glimpse into the future

MLB. Pitching prospect Biddle is living his dream with the Phillies, even if it is happening slowly.

Phillies prospect Jesse Biddle will not start the season playing in Citizens Bank Park. But the odds are that the hurler could be part of the Phillies' possible youth movement in 2015.

It's evident that the Phillies need a fifth starter since Cole Hamels revealed his latest setback last week. However, Biddle will not be part of the rotation. The Germantown Friends alum picked up the victory over the Houston Astros Saturday but was rocked. After his second disappointing performance with the Phillies, Biddle was sent packing for the minor league complex.

Phillies forever

Jesse Biddle was just rows from the field when Brad Lidge struck out Erik Hinske to win the 2008 World Series.

- "There's a picture on the wall here from when the Phillies won that World Series, and I can pick myself out standing in the Diamond Club. There's nothing more than I want than to pitch for the Phillies. I'll do what I can to get there eventually."

But the tall southpaw is departing with some confidence.

"I felt good out there," Biddle said. "There are some things that were clicking and reminding me that I can have success at this level."

Biddle has the tools, but the 22-year-old doesn't have the command yet.

"I have some things I'm going to work on," Biddle said. "I'll take the necessary steps."

Moments after getting the news that he was leaving the big club, Biddle managed a smile when noting that his dream of playing for his favorite childhood team remains.

"It's still amazing where I'm at," Biddle said. "I grew up rooting for the Phillies. I would do anything to play for the Phillies. I'd even play shortstop."

Phillies' Franco emerging as a top prospect

Maikel Franco / GETTY IMAGES

Third baseman Maikel Franco will start the season in Triple-A, but it's not because he isn't good enough to make the big league roster. Franco impressed Phillies coaches and players alike playing third and first base last week.

"I like him a lot," Ryne Sandberg said. "He has a soft glove. He's got a very good arm and he can hit."

Franco has great range at third, and his fabulous reflexes were on display Saturday at first base. He made a number of exceptional plays at first.

"I'm learning a lot at first," Franco said. 'I'm also working on my play at third base."

Franco, 21, is coach Larry Bowa's pet project.

"He has been with me every day, and it's been great," Franco said. "I get a lot [of repetitions], and it's helped."

And then there is Franco's bat. He's been hitting as many line drives as any Phillie during the first week Grapefruit League competition. "I love to hit," Franco said. "I feel comfortable here."

However, Cody Asche, who homered and doubled Saturday, is all but a lock to start at third base when the season opens in Texas.

"There's no rush with Franco," Bowa said. "He's young. He doesn't need to come up now, but I can see him up sooner than later."

Nerlens Noel eyes April 4 Sixers debut

NBA. 76ers center Nerlens Noel tweets his intention to play against the Celtics on April 4.

Sixers first-round pick, center Nerlens Noel, has not suited up in a game for the last-place club this season.

But the future could come sooner than expected for the rebuilding squad. The Boston native tweeted "4-4-14" Sunday, referencing the Sixers' date with the Boston Celtics on April 4.

Noel has missed 62 games so far with an ACL tear he suffered while back at Kentucky in 2013.

The 6-foot-11 big man has slowly been increasing his activity on the practice court and has been working toward a return since doctors cleared him to play at full speed earlier this year.

EVAN MACY

Going on 17

76ers could drop 17th straight game Monday

The Sixers have not won a game since January, and their 16-game losing stint could rival the NBA record of 26 if it continues on.

Their next foe is the New York Knicks, by no means a juggernaut but substantially better than the Sixers' recent competition in Orlando and Milwaukee.

New York is 24-40 and fighting for a playoff spot. They had a pretty bad losing streak going as well but were able to bounce back to win three straight prior to their game at home against Philadelphia.

Micheal Carter-Williams. GETTY IMAGES

The Sixers will begin a stint of games against teams with winning records pretty soon, with Indiana, Memphis and Chicago, among others, slated to face the 15-47 76ers during the next two weeks.

Philly must take advantage of these last opportunities against losing teams if they hope to avoid joining the record books for all the wrong reasons. The opening tip is at 7:30 p.m. METRO
